Vietnamese lifestyle has changed significantly over the years. In the past, most people lived in rural areas, and their daily routines were centered around farming and traditional crafts. Families were usually large, and multiple generations lived under the same roof. People traveled by bicycle or on foot, and motorbikes were considered a luxury. Entertainment was simple, consisting of folk songs, traditional games, and family gatherings.

Today, Vietnam has modernized rapidly. Many people now live in urban areas. They work in offices and factories, or run businesses. Houses are smaller, and families tend to be more independent. With the development of technology, life has become more convenient. Cars and motorbikes are common, and people rely on smartphones for communication and entertainment. The Internet allows access to a vast amount of information, so learning and shopping become easier than ever.

Despite the changes, many Vietnamese traditions remain. Family values are still important, and people continue to celebrate festivals such as Tet and the Mid-Autumn festival. Vietnamese cuisine, with its balance of flavors and fresh ingredients, is still widely enjoyed. While life today is more fast-paced and technology-driven, the essence of Vietnamese culture continues to be preserved.
